Boron Neutron Capture Therapy of Glioblastoma Multiforme. Background: Glioblastoma multiforme (GBM) is the most common and aggressive malignant brain tumor in adults. Treatment consists of maximal resection of the disease, followed by external beam radiation therapy and concomitant and adjuvant chemotherapy. Even with these treatments, prognosis for the patient is poor. Prognostic factors include: age, general health, performance status, the extent of the lesion, and the patient's ability to tolerate treatment. Therapy for GBM is currently undergoing a revolution owing to advances in molecular biology. Patients' tumors are found to express angiogenesis factors, and other molecules involved in the early phases of tumor development. Patients may be treated either with a single agent or combination therapy. One new treatment approach is boron neutron capture therapy (BNCT). This technique relies on the fact that boron-10 (10B) incorporated into DNA, or existing in proteoglycan in the tumor, can be selectively activated with slow neutrons, resulting in the production of high linear energy transfer (LET) alpha particles. The alpha particles can kill cells in close proximity. BNCT uses a concomitant subtherapeutic dose of boronophenylalanine (BPA) and a low linear energy transfer (LET) thermal neutron beam. BPA is most commonly administered orally, but can also be intravenously or intramuscularly given. BPA is a prodrug that is converted to phenylalanine by the enzyme phenylalanine hydroxylase. If there is no normal phenylalanine hydroxylase activity, then the phenylalanine may build up in the blood stream. Boronophenylalanine can be safely administered up to 10 times the normal dose and up to 3 times the maximum tolerated dose, without any serious side effects. In addition, BNCT can provide a robust dose of radiation therapy to a very specific area. There have been several clinical trials of BNCT for the treatment of patients with GBM. This review will examine the evidence for the use of BNCT in GBM from the point of its development to the present and discuss options for future investigation. Methods: Literature published from the year 1975 through the year 2012 was reviewed. References were identified from PubMed, Google Scholar, and related articles, using the key words "glioblastoma multiforme," "neut

Manchester, UK — (RT) David Cameron insisted the UK is "absolutely focused" on the war on terror after an attack in the north of England claimed 22 lives. He also discussed the proposed EU-wide arms ban on the bloc's Thursday ahead of his State Visit to Germany. Tributes are pouring in for the victims of the Manchester Arena attack, including Prime Minister David Cameron and the Queen. The injured victims are being treated in six different hospitals across the city. Around 100 people are still missing. "There is a responsibility on all of us to take the threat of radical Islamic terrorism more seriously. As the Prime Minister has made clear, we are absolutely focused on working with our allies on that and ensuring that the threat of terrorism is dealt with," Cameron said in a televised statement. He said Thursday's attack "was the most appalling act of terrorism" the UK had seen "for many years." A minute's silence was also held in the city's Albert Square, where the blast took place. Cameron was also asked about the proposed EU-wide arms ban and if Britain is ready to push through the measure. He told the BBC he would not "pre-empt" the EU summit, which is due to discuss the ban at the end of the week. The PM said if adopted, the new law would apply to all of Europe, regardless of the country of manufacture, sale and import of the weapons. "We are absolutely committed to being the last country in Europe to be caught out by an international arms trade. We are absolutely committed to that. And we are committed to making sure we do it in the most effective way," Cameron said. He added that he was "confident" the UK would not fall into that category.A cable-knit navy tank top is a versatile, understated look that will easily transition from day to night and any time of year.
