Adobe Photoshop Elements 11, for a low price, is a stripped-down version of Photoshop that also includes other tools (including a rather nice cropping tool) and is aimed at budding photographers who don't want to pay for a full version of Photoshop. Getting to know the program To get the most out of Photoshop, you need to know a few things: Colors: Most people find out in the first two weeks of using Photoshop that colors are especially important — things are either too dark or too light. The color picker (shown in Figure 6-2) is the most convenient way to check colors. Or you can check the Color Settings dialog box, as shown in Figure 6-3. (You don't see that window, which opens when you first turn on the Color Picker, in the figure because I've hidden it by zooming in on the image.) The Color Settings dialog box offers a great deal of control over Photoshop's colors. But remember that it's easy to inadvertently change all sorts of colors when you edit an image. When you change the Color Settings dialog box's Hue Saturation settings, you can quickly make changes to the hue, saturation, and value of any color. You can also make changes to the overall contrast of an image and to the brightness of an image. Grayscale: Photoshop offers two ways to convert an image from color to grayscale. The first way, which is my favorite, is via the Levels adjustment, which you can find in the Adjustments panel. When you adjust the Levels, you can adjust the image's grayscale levels by using sliders, resulting in a more-or-less black-and-white image. (Note: You can read more about the Levels tool in Chapter 10.) The other way to convert your image to grayscale is to choose Image⇒Mode⇒Grayscale. Grayscale is one of the least-used modes, but it's useful when you want to add a sepia effect to your images. It's a good idea to save your files using the default Photoshop grayscale setting. (In Photoshop Elements 11, choose Save As and save the file as a grayscale image.) You can then edit the grayscale settings in Elements to add special effects. Figure 6-2: Use the Color Picker to make sure that colors are consistent. Figure 6-3

GLENDALE, Ariz. -- The Los Angeles Kings not only have enough defensemen for three lines, they have enough fourth-line players to fill all three. The numbers support that notion as the Kings acquired veteran forward Derek Grant from the Dallas Stars for forward Radek Faksa on Friday. The 25-year-old Grant's departure could be considered a salary dump with Dallas' new compliance buyout of Faksa's contract, a deal that gives the Stars the right to buy out the last two years of Faksa's contract at a cost of $3 million. The 24-year-old Faksa, who had 30 points in 49 games with the Stars this season, had been an admirable chip in Dallas' farm system for the past three seasons. Once word that Faksa might be headed elsewhere, the Kings jumped on the opportunity to acquire Faksa's services, with the star defenseman Seth Jones on hand to welcome Faksa to his new home. "We're extremely excited to add Radek to our group, and we're looking forward to him joining our team," Kings defenseman Jake Muzzin said. "It's going to be fun to be playing with him, as well." In the Kings' rebuilding efforts, Faksa should be a good fit. He is a right-shot defender who can kill penalties for a team that must do so frequently these days. "We're happy to have him here," Faksa said. "It's a great opportunity for me and my family." Grant will be a guy who can play anywhere, having played the past two seasons in Dallas. He's a good penalty killer and plays a heavy game with a chip on his shoulder, which could endear him to Kings coach John Stevens. He also is a strong skater. Grant ranked second in the NHL in short-handed goals last season with seven. "He's a big body. He plays very physical and he can play the game as well," Stevens said of Grant. "The two years he's played for us in the league, he's proven that he can play a two-way game." Grant, a native of Edmonton, Alberta, who is 6-foot-5, 220 pounds, scored just four goals in 58 games with Dallas this season. He had five goals in 69 games last season. "I was able to play five

Q: Any way to replace existing zlib,bz2 and openjpeg with image manipulation API? I am looking for a way to replace existing zlib,bz2 and openjpeg functionality with image manipulation API. I dont mind even recompile linux kernels. If there is no way, is there any way to do this by using existing API like image manipulation library? For example, can i replace those API with these code? I mean, is there any way to replace such libraries' functions and use them in our program instead of using those libraries. A: Instead of trying to replace those libraries with ImageMagick, which is certainly possible, what you want to do is create a new image manipulation library that calls those three libraries internally and is ready to use in its own right. Yes, that means recompiling the kernel. Yes, it means there's no guarantee that future versions of those libraries won't change the APIs. But, it means you have the ability to update all your code to use your new library, and you have the ability to add new functionality. How much of that would be acceptable depends on the size of your code base. If your code base is small and your users have no expectation of always getting the latest version of ImageMagick, then perhaps you could do it. Now, to answer your question about whether you can just replace the libraries... You need to modify all your code to be aware of the changes in the libraries and the new API. That's probably not a huge issue, since you'd have to follow the APIs anyway if you were using them, but yes, you will have to modify your code. That's the likely real problem with the approach. Let's assume you have a library that uses the zlib library. You want to replace zlib's `compress()` method with the `compress()` method of your new library. Are you going to be able to do that? No. zlib has hundreds of methods, and no, you're not going to go through and modify every one of those and call your own version. zlib (or whatever library you're using) implements the API to be used by the calling program, not the calling library. That's not up to you to change, and it's not your responsibility either. You're using the API, not the library. It's very very unlikely that the new libraries are going to be generic enough to replace existing libraries in
