Seven wonderful days without headphones and nice music. Oh, and the best European airport WiFi. The plane was short on time so two people shared one bed, an armchair, and one laptop (computer, that is). We used this computer for entertainment and for email, Facebook, and blogging. Our flight arrived at 9:30am in Vienna. Before reaching the baggage claim, we were each in a different baggage terminal, with different check in and customs procedures, in an airport in which we knew nobody. The only person we knew was the Austrian family (two parents, a little boy, and an older girl) that accompanied us to the taxi stand. The bathroom looked similar to the one in the photos with the tap, a sink, and a toilet. Oh, and a mirror in the ceiling. If anyone wants to take a day trip to Vienna, then I recommend it. Hotel rooms are a steal. It was a Monday night, so we had a quiet room. On this morning, we could hear the radio, but it was in German. On Thursday and Friday, we spent the day exploring Vienna. We bought some tourist maps and decided that the best way to see all of Vienna is by foot. After lunch, Jeffrey and I bought some coffee, and then we took some time to look around. Vienna is extremely beautiful. The architecture is incredible. There were city residents out and about, but they were a little reserved. We decided we would wait for the locals to do some studying and socializing before we did. Friday, we went to the
