"In just a few short years, research teams working from leading universities like ETH Zurich, DTU, Fraunhofer, Zhejiang University, Sichuan University and Ghent University have done incredible work on capturing, analysing and modeling human movement and learning how to interpret this data to help us understand, explain and immerse players in the game of football," said Sven Sjöström, Executive Producer at EA Sports. "This brings FIFA to a whole new level of fidelity that no other sports game has offered before." All 22 official players featured in the FIFA 22 cover -- Messi, Ronaldo, Ronaldo, Robben, Chelsea's Hazard, Bale, Cruyff, and 49 others -- were used to power the game. HyperMotion Technology was created by the EA Sports FIFA Team to combine gameplay data from top level players with extensive biomechanics and movement research to optimize the creation of immersive and authentic football simulation. "Our goal as developers was to bring authentic-looking match data to a football simulation so fans would feel like they were playing in a real-life match," said Laurence Johnson, Senior Creative Producer at EA SPORTS and lead developer for FIFA 18. "We've used the latest in player analysis to build a high-fidelity motion capture suit, bringing to life a total of 22 official players from this season." "We've brought the best athletes and players to life so that you feel like you're taking part in a real-life match," added Johnson. "Whether it's the agility of Ronaldo or the strength and explosiveness of Messi, we've worked closely with the players to ensure the movement is as natural as possible." The result is the most realistic and authentic motion capture body animation to date in a football simulation. New to FIFA 22: New Player Body Model - HyperMotion Technology captures the real movements of 22 official players. "HyperMotion Technology" is a platform featuring a "capture-to-simulation" process that captures the unique motions and abilities of the player, and then translates that data into the game. "HyperMotion Technology" captures real-life movements from 21 players across the four key areas of the body: legs, feet, torso, and arms. The result is the most realistic and authentic body model to date in a football simulation. Enhanced
