Keep your people productive and your systems secure with the network security solutions.. Multiple courses in the complete collection are now available. From A Strange Room to Open Field 23.04.2019 The Late Show's Josh Blue may be a comedian. But, as we have seen on his web series and Twitter, he is no stranger to the darker corners of human decency. Some of his most recent sketches have been of social justice issues, such as op-eds that read as though they were written by a dog. He thoughtfully critiques the people's obsession with making their private Facebook information, private, while simultaneously having enough time to downplay our collective obsession with it. Josh also spends a lot of time mocking the pseudo-intellectual movements of the left, especially on the subject of sex. We are delighted to announce that Josh and his team have created a new sketch series on Twitter. 'Open Field', as it has been titled, is 'about sex'. Josh is, of course, a master satirist, but Open Field marks a welcome change from his usual audience-baiting target of the right wing, and offers up a more genuine slice of what it means to be part of the online UK community. The team behind Open Field include journalist, writer and comedian Emma Hughes, Bristol based filmmaker Sarah Robertson and Sara Stewart, a comedian and writer. Each of them have been involved in many TV projects before, including The Late Show's Head of Content Steph Wells-Dickey, and have a history of comedy and sketch-writing. Josh is the one constant, and one of the main reasons why we asked him to join us. 'Josh's skills as a comedian are rather rare, but his love of writing and his enthusiasm and sincerity as a human being makes him a fantastic addition to the team.' Steph They've drawn up a few pilot scripts, each of which features a compelling story and some really topical dialogue, as well as topical, punchy jokes. The series will be made available to watch for free on Twitter, and will also be added to the channel's YouTube page over the coming months, and if it works out well, could develop into an on-air podcast. To view a sneak peak of one of the scenes, just follow this link or search Twitter. 'Open Field' is due to go live
